Diana Scarpa

BIOGRAPHY

Diana has more than 8 years of experience as a project manager in marine protected areas with the Colombian National Parks System. She has participated in processes to define and implement management plans for marine protected areas in the Colombian Caribbean and along the Pacific coast.

She was a manager for a channel marking and mooring buoy installation project in the archipelagos of Rosario and St. Bernardo in the Colombian Caribbean. She coordinated a team of international managers and law enforcement officers from the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary and the Colombian National Parks.

She has worked with local communities promoting social participation and conservation of protected areas through the implementation of environment educational programs and sustainable productive projects.

Diana has a master's degree in parks and recreation management from the University of Montana, with specialty in planning and developing satisfactory recreational opportunities for visitors to protected areas.
